Note from Internet Publisher: Donald L. Potter

February 23, 2013

Odessa, TX

I used Hazel Loring's 1980 Reading Made Easy with Blend Phonics as the phonics corpus from which the words in this document were chosen.

I simply organized the words into spelling-families to make it easier for the students to discover the spelling patterns for reading and spelling. Other words were added to make sure the patterns were adequately covered. There are a few more words in this document than the original Blend Phonics.

The common element in each spelling-family is aligned in columns, with the common element in perfect letter-by-letter alignment. I used a Courier New fixed-width font to enable me to achieve the perfect alignment of each letter. Some "irregular" words are included in the columns, but underlined to indicate that they do not possess the same sound value as the other spelling structures. The teachers will point out these differences.

The spelling-families are especially good for cursive handwriting practice since they give the student the opportunity to repeat the motor patterns. Cursive is far superior to manuscript for helping student to internalize these motor and acoustic patterns to automaticity.

Oral and written spelling should also be employed at every step. Students should be taught to read, write, and spell (orally and in writing) the words fluently.

It is important to remember, "Because consonants and vowel sounds actually overlap each other, there is no sequence of sound in the usual sense. It would be better, then, to talk about phonological structure of syllables and words and NOT their phonological sequence or order." (Find the Vowel: Read the Rime, Learn to Read by Miriam Cherkesk-Julkowski, p. 15). Cursive handwriting reflects this co-articulation feature in the motor realm. Ironically co-articulation is what makes oral language fluent and reading difficult.

The Proper Place of the Blend Phonics' Spelling Family Reading and Spelling Exercises in the Blend Phonics Program.

Purpose: The Spelling Family Reading and Spelling Exercises are an auxiliary to the Reading Made Easy with Blend Phonics for First Grade. The spelling family exercises are designed to enhance reading fluency and spelling ability.

Proper Place: The Spelling Family Reading and Spelling Exercises are to be used AFTER student have been introduced to proper directionality with the blend phonics technique. Blend phonics is sometimes call single-letter phonics. The Blend Phonics teaches the body-coda approach to building syllables: bat = ba +t. The blend ba- is the body of the syllable and -t is the coda. The spelling family technique teaches the onset-rime approach to building syllables: b+at = bat: b- is the onset and -at is the rime. Both are valuable, but to assure directionality blend phonics should come BEFORE spelling-family.

Proper Order:

1. Reading Made Easy with Blend Phonics for First Grade. This should be taught exactly as described in her brief but brilliant introduction, “Why Teach Blend Phonics” and her brief but adequate, “Lesson Plans for the Teaching of Phonics in First Grade.
2. Blend Phonics Lessons and Stories: A Complete Phonics Reading Program for All Ages. This paperback was published by Mr. Potter in 2015. It is available from Amazon or Barnes & Noble.
3. The Spelling Family Reading and Spelling Exercises. Note that this is to be done AFTER the students have been taught with the blend phonics directional technique. It is my practice to also have the students spell some of the words. I also use the Exercises for handwriting practice. The repletion of the rime patterns is excellent handwriting practice, and especially helpful when taught with cursive.
