Chart by Donald L. Potter, 2/21/10: www.donpotter.net  Revised 3/9/10
Over the years, I have only seen one or two set of decodable readers that I thought were truly decodable. A premier example of good decodable stores is the 1997 Alpha-Phonics First Readers by Samuel L. Blumenfeld. Most so-called decodable texts are sprinkled heavily with sight-words and pictures and are further handicapped by texts that are highly predictable. This leads students to develop the guessing habit, which we call “artificially induced whole-word dyslexia.”

I received these stores from Mrs. Elizabeth Brown a couple weeks ago. I am very delighted to report that they are free of sight-words and pictures. The texts have low predictability because they have been so constructed so as to prevent context guessing.

They were designed to go with my Blend Phonics Reader Lite, which is available on the Education Page of my website, www.donpotter.net.

Mrs. Brown designed these as little booklets that the kids would read individually AFTER they had successfully completed mastering the Blend Phonics Unit for the story. I reformatted the Booklets into a single document for my purposes at the Odessa Christian School and in my private tutoring with children, teens, and adults with reading problems.

Mrs. Brown designed each booklet as a standalone little document to be read like a little independent book. I combined the stories to save paper when using them with my tutoring students.

I appreciate all the work Mrs. Brown has done to provide us with a truly decodable text, which will not cause any undesirable side effects so prevalent in the current basal phonics decodable readers. Her website is well worth visiting: www.thephonicspage.org.
